INTRODUCTORY ADDRESS: OF THE SESSION OF 1878-9 OF THE LAW DEPARTMENT OF THE UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA (CLASSIC REPRINT) (PAPERBACK)DOWNLOAD

Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Introductory Address: Of the Session of 1878-9 of the Law Department of the University of Pennsylvania The American lawyer has a peculiar experience. Coming generally from the horizontal plane of the people, before the noon of life he toils for bread, but when his sun has reached the meridian he begins the pursuit of reputation and honor, trusting that his evening rays will grow into the gorgeous light of a brilliant sunset; and in this expectation, if learned and honest, he is seldom disappointed. Much of the success of a lawyer depends on right notions of law and government, the want of which forms the trickster and the pettifogger. But when his mind is filled with just conceptions of their true origin, and he traces all laws to their divine source, he rises to the grandeur of their import, and his conscience becomes alive to their obligation. Without a proper sense of the obligation of law, he degenerates into the common-place practitioner and the cunning advocate. Law! Grand, divine, immortal energy! Springing from the unbounded depths of Jehovah, it pursues nature into all her pathways, and invests all being with its power. Surrounding man with a divine investiture, it accompanies him at every step from birth to death, forming his code of morals, and becoming the guide of his conduct, and the true basis of right government. There is a unity and harmony centring all things natural and moral in the Creator, and binding all their systems of order in a single bond. It cannot be otherwise, unless we suppose more than one creator of matter and of mind; for the same great Author deals not in repugnant...
