Not a cooling breeze had rustled the froned palm, or stirred the waters of the Nile. The sun, pouring down from a cloudless sky upon the desert sand and the sand-rock hills, made them gleam and glitter. The intense whiteness was relieved here and there by a sharply defined strip of rich green grass upon the borders of the. River, or the soft grey of the granite temples. Wearily had the fellahin toiled under the burning sun, making their bricks without straw. The birds coming to the water s edge to drink, arose slowly on the wing, with aim less motion, and lazily wheeling about, alighted again at the river.
