Excerpt: . southeast and 20 miles broad from northeast to southwest. Nine years later it was about 20 miles long from east to west and 15 miles broad from north to south. In still more recent years ccessive dikes had been constructed, the lake had almost dried up, and most of the area formerly covered by it had been brought under cultivation. But the unusual precipitation of 1907 caused the whole central portion of the valley to be inundated, and extended the lake to approximately its old shore line of 1880, almost at the base of the Kettleman Hills. The accompanying topographic map (Pl. I), which was made in the summer of 1007, shows the abnormally high mark reached by the lake at that time. During the late Quaternary period Tulare Lake covered a much ereater area than at present, as is shown by the presence of an old beach at an elevation of more than 100 feet above its present level, 2 or 3 miles west of the northwestern corner of the lake as shown on the map, and also by marked shore lines at lower elevations. The old beach consists of a ridge of sand about 20 feet wide and 6 to 8 feet high, somewhat eroded and covered with low vegetation, which runs for a mile or so along the low slope flanking the Kettleman Hills. Its present elevation is probably due in part to the progress of recent relative uplift of...
